The Background

Catholics have always had a very broad view of God's desire and capacity to include all of His creatures in the important work of salvation. God does not confine Himself to simple, one to one relationships between He and us. Rather, He allows all of us to become helpers of each other as we offer prayers, and as we worship together in the communion of the Church's family.

The network of friendship and assistance extends into the next life with those persons who are in heaven, and also to the unseen creatures of God, the Angels. We are always surrounded by a great cloud of witnesses, helpers, friends, and intercessors who all share in God's freely given love and power.

Much like we get to know certain people on earth and draw close to them, we are encouraged to get to know the Saints and Angels as well. We can learn about their stories, be impressed by their examples, and we can ask for their prayers. We can trust in the continual guidance of our Guardian Angel. We are never alone while we have their friendship.

As time passed, the Church grew in the practice of naming special, or Patron Saints, to watch over specific persons, places, things, and activities. Learning who our Patron Saints are, and asking for their help, is yet another way to deepen our friendship with them.

The "Angelus" prayer goes back several centuries in the Church originating from some of the practices of the monasteries that called to mind the Incarnation at different times of the day with simple prayers. It eventually became a means for ordinary Christians who were not living in monasteries to mark the passage of the day by calling to mind the Incarnation at morning, noon, and night. The text of the prayer centers on the truth that God became man, and was born among us through a woman, Mary.

Praying the "Angelus" regularly helps us remember how close God is to us, and also how much God desires that we imitate the attitude, or disposition, of the Blessed Mother so that He can enter the world again, and again through each of us.
