The Background

Throughout the Old Testament there are examples of collections being taken, or resources being set aside, to fund the buildings and sacrifices needed for worship. In the Gospels we read that the daily needs of Jesus and his disciples were funded by the resources of community members who were convinced of the importance of Jesus' mission (Lk. 8:1-3). There are also several examples of collections and offerings made for the poor and the vulnerable.

What emerged from these ancient practices is the Christian habit of giving resources to support the needy and also to support the essential needs of the Church itself. As the outreach and structures of the Church grew in scope, it became a Church commandment (or precept) for Catholics to support the needs of the Church with their resources.

We know this these days by the term "Stewardship" which is the understanding that all of our time, talents, and treasure comes from God, and that as stewards (those who manage something for someone else who lends it to them), we have to dedicate a portion of our resources solely for the Church's needs.

Just as all Catholics are obligated to give, the leaders of the Church also have the obligation and responsibility to manage the donations they receive wisely, using them only in the way the donors intended.

Giving to charitable causes regularly helps to keep our own attitudes about money and material goods in a healthy perspective. We are less likely to become possessed by our possessions if we easily hand them over to others for their needs. As we do, God blesses us in return.

It is very difficult for us to be giving people if we are not grateful people. As we grow in the regular practice of thanking God for what we have, we will also grow in generosity, and we will complain less and less.
